At the bottom of the hill, below where the Iron Man had come over the high cliff, they dug a deep, big hole. A hole wider than a house, and as deep as a lake. It was a large hole. A big hole! And the sides of it were sheer as walls.

Now they reckoned the Iron Man would come over the top of the cliff out of the sea and he'd see the old lorry which was painted red, and he'd come down to get it to chew it up and eat it.

The farmers talked of filling the hole in. After all, you can't leave a big pit like that, somebody might fall in.
